

Training assistance for cancelled apprentices and trainees

NOTE: Students currently enrolled in a school or alternative schooling arrangements are NOT eligible.

A person who was an apprentice or trainee and their training contract was cancelled, may consider it advantageous to continue training with their registered training organisation while they look for an employer to carry on the apprenticeship or traineeship. In some circumstances, these cancelled apprentices and trainees may be eligible for the training to be funded under a Queensland Government program.

Queensland apprentices who have had their training contract cancelled and would like assistance to re-enter their chosen career can register their details on the out-of-trade register at www.tradeapprentices.com.au.

Eligibility

A cancelled apprentice or trainee may be eligible for the training to be funded under a Queensland Government program if:

- they were registered as an apprentice or trainee in Queensland (cancelled school-based apprentices/trainees who are still enrolled in a school or alternative schooling arrangement, such as distance or home-based, are not eligible).
- they are currently living in Queensland
- they were eligible to receive Queensland Government funded training for their apprenticeship or traineeship
- they have chosen a training organisation that is approved to deliver the training under Queensland Government funding arrangements
- the proposed training is in the same qualification as their cancelled apprenticeship or traineeship – if the qualification has been superseded, they may be eligible to continue training in the succeeding qualification
- the proposed training commences within 12 months of effect of cancellation of the cancelled training contract
- they have completed and lodged the ATF-015 Training assistance for cancelled apprentices and trainees form with the Department of Trade, Employment and Training (DTET) and it is approved by DTET. It is essential that DTET approves the application before training commences.

Important: The applicant may still be responsible for the payment of a student contribution to the training organisation.

Although not essential, it is in the applicant's best interests to register with Centrelink as an active jobseeker and ask Centrelink to support this training as an approved activity. This is particularly important if the applicant is seeking income support for their living expenses whilst undertaking the training. For information, phone Centrelink on 13 28 50.

How to apply for training assistance

1. Complete Section A of the ATF-015 Training assistance for cancelled apprentices and trainees form and sign the declaration. If under 18 years of age, the applicant's parent or guardian will need to sign Section A also (if appropriate).
2. Select a training organisation approved to deliver Queensland Government funded training. Discuss when training can take place and any costs to you. Ask the training organisation to complete and sign Section B of the ATF-015 form.
3. Where possible, register with Centrelink as an active jobseeker and, prior to attending training, ask Centrelink to complete Section C of the ATF-015 form, inserting the applicant's jobseeker ID number and the Centrelink office stamp.
4. When the ATF-015 form has been completed, lodge it via the email to apprenticeshipsinfo@qld.gov.au.
5. DTET will complete Section D after verifying the applicant's eligibility for training assistance. DTET will provide a copy of the completed form to the applicant and notify the training organisation of the decision.

Important: You would need to be employed and registered as an apprentice or trainee in an active training contract to receive a completion certificate for the apprenticeship or traineeship.

If training assistance is approved, the applicant may be eligible for travel and/or accommodation subsidies to help with expenses when attending this training. For more information, visit the department's website or phone 1800 210 210 for assistance.

Competency-based wage progression implications

Applicants need to be aware that the completion of additional competencies through continued institutional training may impact on their wage level by accelerating them to a higher wage level and, consequently, may lower job prospects. It is suggested that an apprentice or trainee should only complete a certain percentage of their training which is dependent upon the year, stage or level of the nominal term of their apprenticeship or traineeship they have completed:

- A cancelled apprentice or trainee who has completed less than the first year, stage or level should ONLY complete up to 20% of their training.
- A cancelled apprentice or trainee who has completed the first year, stage or level should ONLY complete up to 45% of their training.
- A cancelled apprentice or trainee who has completed the second year, stage or level should ONLY complete up to 70% of their training.
- A cancelled apprentice or trainee who has completed the third year, stage or level should ONLY complete up to 90% of their training.

These percentages should include any training completed under an active training contract and any training that may be completed under this assistance. If an applicant is unsure of what year, stage or level they have completed, contact the training organisation.
